"Sponsoring a disabled trainee at Reaching Out Arts and Craft is a fantastic way to make a real difference to the life of another person. Being part of the Reaching Out family is a wonderful thing."

—Harold Saperstein, a friend of Reaching Out since 2001

"People with disabilities in developing countries are over-represented among the poorest people. They have been largely overlooked in the development agenda so far. Addressing disability is a significant part of reducing poverty. Bringing disabled people out of the corners and back alleys of society, and empowering them to thrive in the bustling centre of national life will do much to improve the lives of many from among the poorest around the world."

—A quotation from the Poverty Reduction Strategies of World Bank

"With the opportunity to learn marketable skills and to work in a supportive environment, disabled people can break the cycle of poverty and exclusion. They can successfully integrate into mainstream society and become self-sufficient. In many cases, people with disabilities find they can become exceptionally skilled in a certain disicipline, regardless of their limitations in other areas."

—Binh Le Nguyen, founder and director of Reaching Out
